

EFHOH president letter

Dear Friends,

The end of the year 2006 is coming very soon but first we have the nice family parties in December. I hope that all of you and your family have a good Christmas time and a Happy New Year.

From this place I will congratulate SOAP! The Netherlands with their very big and important success about subtitling of TV programs in the Netherlands. More about the new Dutch Media Law included subtitling you can read in this EFHOH newsletter. I hope that this Dutch example of good co-operation between all Dutch organisation for Deaf and Hard of Hearing people will stimulate you in your country.

Maybe you have read in the Newspapers that on 13th December the European Parliament have said YES to the Television Without Frontiers Directive. The directive was voted at the Culture Committee of the European Parliament in November. Two disability-related amendments (on non-discrimination and accessibility) passed. The plenary vote, which took place on 13th December, largely determined the direction that the European Union takes in relation to accessibility of audio-visual media services to people with disabilities. EDF and EFHOH therefore lobbied to ensure that the European Parliament votes in favour of these two amendments on 13 December. Although the amendments were adopted, EDF regrets their weak wording. More about the next actions of our members you can read also in this EFHOH newsletter.

I am worried about the problem that there is no comprehensive solution in all Member States of Europe for hard of hearing users to call the single European emergency number 112. Accessibility to public pay phones is not addressed in a harmonised way in the Member States; text telephones used by hard of hearing users are not interoperable across Member States or across networks; etc. Arnoud van Wijk gives us some latest information in this EFHOH newsletter.

Yesterday (Friday 14th December) I participated in a meeting in Copenhagen Denmark, organized by the World Health Organization (WHO) regional office for Europe. It was the first time for me as president of EFHOH to have a meeting at the WHO-Europe office. The WHO regional office for Europe is one of the six regional offices throughout the world, each one with its own programme geared to the particular health problems of the countries it serves. The European Region embraces some 870 Million people living in an area stretch from the Arctic Ocean in the North and the Mediterranean Sea in the South in the West to the Pacific in the East. This shows us a big geographic Europe in the WHO definition, including Israel. One of the topics that we have discussed is noise and prevention for young people, people at work and so on. Please let me know when you have a national action plan about prevention of noise in your own country. Quality of life for HOH people is the main goal of EFHOH; it is good to see that also WHO-Europe will be working towards this goal.

EDF has worked hard for a better Quality of Life for all disabled people across the European Union for the last 10 years. In 2007 EDF celebrates 10 years of existence. Its new goal; achieving far-reaching European legislation against discrimination of disabled people in all sectors of life, is to be obtained thanks to backing this aim by a million European citizens.

This year 2006 will be marked by some big EDF successes;

- the adoption of the Rights of disabled Air Passengers;
- the integration of the principle of non-discrimination and accessibility within the General Regulation of the European Structural funds 2007-2013;
- the adoption of a United Nations Convention on the Rights of persons with disabilities is finalised.

We as board of EFHOH are very thankful for all the good work that EDF and their staff has been doing in the last 10 years, we wish EDF a successful next 10 years.

THE EFHOH BOARD WISH YOU A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND THANKS YOU FOR YOUR SUPPORT THIS YEAR AND SEE YOU IN

New Media Law in the Netherlands

On the First of December 2006 a new Media Law has started in the Netherlands, including subtitling of television programs. This new Media Law means that in 2010 the Public Broadcasters will have 95% of their (live) programs subtitled. Also the commercial broadcasters will have 50% of their programs subtitled by 2010.

This new Media Law does not hold for the three channels of the broadcaster RTL (Radio Television Luxembourg) because they are established in Luxembourg.

The new Media Law in the Netherlands is built up as follows:

Before 1 January 2008: at least 80%
Before 1 January 2009: at least 85%
Before 1 January 2010: at least 90%
Before 1 January 2011: at least 95%

And for the 7 Dutch commercial broadcasters:

Before 1 January 2008: at least 15%
Before 1 January 2009: at least 25%
Before 1 January 2010: at least 35%
Before 1 January 2011: at least 50%

The Dutch council of media oversees the percentages of subtitling by the 7 different broadcasters in the Netherlands. When one of them does not have this percentage they will be sanctioned.

The new Media Law in the Netherlands is a very big and important success for SOAP! SOAP is the cooperative between all organisations for deaf and hard of hearing people in the Netherlands.

Of course we as EFHOH hope that this success of SOAP is a good example for other EFHOH members across over Europe.

EDF: EU-25 commits to the protection of disabled people's Human Rights through a new UN Convention

Brussels, 12 December 2006 – The United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities represents a historical moment for the European disability movement. The innovative Convention, not only is the first official recognition of disability as a Human Rights issue, but also, it will be the first Human Rights Treaty to be signed by the European Communities as a legal entity, since the beginning of the European integration process.

All men and women shall enjoy from their most fundamental rights. Very often, this principle is far from daily reality. None of the EU-25 can claim that they are respectful of disabled people's Human Rights, a group facing discrimination and prejudice in all fields of life.

This is the first time that an international instrument of the kind covers both the civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights of people with disabilities, establishing an effective framework for the rights' protection of 650 million people in the world. The ratifying countries will now be legally obliged to treat people with disabilities as individuals with rights, clearly defined throughout the 50 articles of the Convention text, covering all fields of life.

The European Disability Forum (EDF), the representative organisation of 50 million disabled people in the European Union, has played the leading role in the negotiations and final approval of the Convention. Even more, the adoption process of the Treaty has constituted a newness in the UN negotiation procedures, as for the first time, disability NGOs from all over the world have represented a driving force towards the final adoption of the text.

"I am very proud and satisfied with tomorrow's adoption of the Convention. I am proud of EDF's leading role in the whole process, representing the interests of all European with disabilities at an international level and raising their visibility. I am also extremely satisfied because for the first time, disability is officially recognised at world level and by the European Union as a Human Rights issue and this recognition will become part of EU's acquis communautaire", declared today the President of the European Disability Forum, Yannis Vardakastanis.

The Convention's signature and ratification process

On 30 March 2007, the Convention will be open in for the signature and ratification of the 192 UN-Member States. The Convention needs to be ratified by at least 20 countries to enter into force. As a signatory entity, the European Communities will also be scrutinised regarding the implementation of the rights of persons with disabilities in the EU-25. Moreover, it commits to the adoption of the necessary measures and legislation to effectively protect these rights.

The European Commission shall submit a proposal to the Council of the European Union, early 2007, in order to establish the signature and ratification procedure to be adopted by the European Communities. The decision will be taken by unanimity.

EDF is confident that the EU Member States will sign the Convention jointly, in accordance with the common strategy adopted by the European Union during the whole negotiation process. EDF calls on the European Communities and the Member States to concurrently sign the 18 articles of the optional protocol of the Convention about individual (or group) complaints and State enquiries.

For the European Disability Forum, this major success shall be reinforced by the development of stronger disability legislation in the European Union at all levels. So far, only a European directive protects disabled people from discrimination in the field of employment.

"Disability has generally been considered by the European Union as a non priority issue, despite the systematic violation of disabled people's rights in all Member States. From now on, there is no doubt that the EU-25 has the legitimate role and the moral obligation to actively protect the Human Rights of all European with disabilities, until discrimination will totally disappear in Europe", stressed Vardakastanis.

International Holiday Meeting for Hard of Hearing and Late Deafened People 3rd – 13th August 2006 in Wehlen, Germany

Wehlen is the very little town near the famous City Dresden in the South part of ex-DDR, in Saxon Switzerland. This area is very popular destination for people who are interesting to hike or cycle. The landscape is beautiful with River Elbe which begins from Czech Republic and flows to via Hamburg to North Sea.

In this Holiday Meeting (called also Rally) we had 48 participants from 8 different countries: Finland, France, Great Britain, Germany, Ireland, Sweden, Switzerland and USA. Our accommodation place was Strand Hotel Wehlen. Every evening we had dinner with three courses in the hotel restaurant.

Our program was very interesting, perhaps too much. The City Dresden we visited two times. First we made the common sightseeing with official visit in Town Hall and same days late we have looked the beautiful Frauenkirche, which in Second World War has been destroyed total and now it is staying again in full glamour after great reconstruction.

We visited with hard of hearing people from Hamburg Association in the Königstein, which is the biggest mountain fortress in Europe.

The longest trip was to Prague / Czech Republic. It was only two hours long bus tour to this old and very nice city. Weather was wonderful sunny, and the city full with tourists. Our guide had a lot of difficulties to keep our big group together and to guide us through the old city.

Participants in Prague

One day we made journey with historical tram from Bad Schandau via Kirnitzschtal to waterfall Lichtenhain. This waterfall was in fully magnificence every half hour by button push.

The last highlight in our program was the visit the Meissen porcelain manufacture. Our guides separately in German and English languages told the history, development and production of porcelain very clearly and shortly. We have visited two demonstration places to see, how the porcelain things has been made and how they has been painted. It was very interesting and all of the beautiful porcelain things and dishes and the time reserved for us was really too short.

Between program days the participants had free time to hike or to made bicycle tours to Bastai, the area of sandstone mountains along the River Elbe.

The ten days in Town Wehlen were very quickly over. I think that the participants were happy to be together in beautiful landscape and with good program. There was also time enough to discuss together about different topics and about different experiences. Therefore I think that IFHOH must have this tradition to organize next Holiday Meeting, but where and which time?

A World Flyer

One sunny Saturday in late August, a group of more than 100 people gathered at Barkarby, a small airfield outside Stockholm. Among them were the undersigned. We had come to witness a historical moment, the landing of a very special aircraft named World Flyer. Steered by the pilot Johan Hammarström together with his two colleagues, the aircraft and its crew had fulfilled an extra-ordinary mission: Johan had become the first pilot hard-of-hearing since birth to circumnavigate the earth in a small aircraft. And eventually they came, flanked by another two small aircrafts. They passed over the crowded area a couple of times, before touching the soil of their homeland. This was the final landing of a journey that lasted well over four months.

Immediately after the landing, the aircraft came slowly rolling from the runway, and just where they stopped, a yellow-blue ribbon had to be cut: Marking the end of the flight and fulfilling the record trial. Then a small party took place, they were cheered by their families, girlfriends and sponsors etc. Not more than an hour after the landing, the boys held a two-hour presentation of the trip. Due to modern technology, they were able to show digital pictures on the screen from the entire journey.

And why did they start this adventurous expedition? Apart from the goal mentioned above, they had a couple of things they wanted to achieve by the flight: To establish contacts with hard-of-hearing people around the world and their organizations. To spread knowledge about hearing losses and the demands that follows this impairment. And they made stops in a lot of countries: First of course in Europe; in Israel, India, Vietnam, and many others in South-East Asia. Not to forget Australia and America. Everywhere they were met by tremendous interest from both media and organizations for hard-of-hearing people.

Of course not everything on the flight went as smooth as the landing in Stockholm. There were several incidents and thrilling moments of the flight. Some of them might have ended the expedition right on the spot, had not things worked out the way they wanted.

Flying in Western Europe, the first weeks of the journey was not especially difficult or dangerous. But when leaving Israel, the boys had to fly along the border to Jordanian, then southward to Egypt. After that they had to make a five hour crossing of Saudi-Arabia, right into the war-stricken region of Middle-East. Like on all flights today, they had to keep the "slot-time": A fixed time for the crossing. If for some reason they didn't keep their time, it meant they would have needed a new permission from the authorities. This would have delayed the expedition for several weeks.

The long jumps over the oceans were of course in some ways the most challenging. Special precautions had to be taken, like additional fuel-tanks and so on.

The Pacific provided one of the most thrilling moments of the trip: A long flight to Christmas Island in bad weather conditions. Given a vivid description of this, you certainly agree. And you feel very happy that you were not up in that aircraft on that very night. Christmas Island is very small, a part of the Republic of Kiribati. The 5000 inhabitants make their living from fishing and coconut-growing. They have just one, very small airfield located in an area where electricity is very rare. The staff consists of just one person, operating the field from a hut beside the runway.

Approaching the island late in the evening, the darkness and heavy rain made it impossible to land, because there were no lights on the field. Also they knew that they had passed the point of no return, they couldn't go back. By their satellite-phone they tried to contact the operator on the ground. But no answer, he was asleep in his hut in a nearby village having probably mistaken the date of arrival.

But the boys circled around, trying to catch a glimpse of anything showing their correct position. They couldn't be sure if they had actually reached land, or if they were still above the sea. Eventually the operator woke up by the engine noise, and realised someone was trying to land on his field. So jumped into his lorry and drove to the airfield. There he started a diesel generator, and suddenly Johan and his friend saw the runway lighting up. So they managed to put the aircraft down, and got a final surprise when realizing the runway was covered with thousands of crabs!

Now Johan and his friends are able to look back, being proud and satisfied. They successfully reached their goals, in scheduled time and also kept their budget. And the project does not end here; Johan has a calendar with bookings a year ahead, making presentations of his journey and other events. Certainly, all the contacts he made will be of great benefit to the international work of hard-of-hearing organizations. But I would say the greatest achievement of this expedition is something else: Showing hard-of-hearing people all around the world that in spite of your hearing loss, if you got enough will and spirit, you are able to fulfil your dreams.

Additional:

In Sweden Johan Hammarström got a lot of attention, especially from the HOH-organizations. The local HRF-organization of the Stockholm area awarded Johan Hammarström their prize "Stockholms-Snäckan" (The Shell of Stockholm). You can read more about this on the expedition site.

Commissioner Reding recognized accessibility of information and communication technologies for disabled persons as a priority (Brussels, 17/10/2006)

Advancing the agenda on accessibility of Information and Communication Technologies for people with disabilities was at the core of yesterday's meeting between Viviane Reding, European Commissioner in charge of Information Society, and Yannis Vardakastanis, EDF President.

In particular, Commissioner Reding and EDF President, Yannis Vardakastanis, discussed the measures to be taken to follow up on the Riga Ministerial Declaration on e-Inclusion adopted in June 2006 by 34 European countries which have expressed their strong commitment to promoting an inclusive and barrier-free Information Society which fosters social and economic inclusion, including a special focus on people with disabilities.

EDF President raised the importance for concrete measures to be taken in the field of accessibility of digital television, accessibility of public websites, as well as accessibility requirements in the structural funds regulation and public procurement. "There is a need for pragmatic and concrete response to disabled citizens' concerns", said Vardakastanis. "The opportunity offered by the accessibility requirements in European public funding should be used as a lever for change".

Commissioner Reding expressed her interests in disability issues and reiterated her commitment to make Information and Communication Technologies accessibility standards for public procurement mandatory by 2010. She stressed that "In the context of demographic changes in Europe, the perspectives on disability and accessibility issues will change as society will age. The European Commission is fully aware of these concerns and therefore included disability and ageing as a priority in the future research framework programme."

Report of the Minister Conference Riga and INCOM/TCAM meetings

On June 11 2006 in Riga, the European countries agreed to enhance e-Accessibility and usability by "15: fully implementing the e-Accessibility provisions in EU legislation on electronic communication and terminal equipment and using all other instruments available, from voluntarily commitments to new legal provisions at EU and national level where appropriate. The effectiveness of these various instruments needs to be regularly assessed".

By 2010 all ICT services must be accessible for ALL EU citizens. This will include the hard of hearing people. That also includes Internet telephony as well. The "Riga Declaration" is one of the tools the EFHOH is using to push telecommunication for everybody.

Access to the single European emergency number 112:

Sadly, it is not easy to do this work. There is a lack of understanding how important communication is for the individual to participate in the society. Hearing people are actually not aware about the value of their own hearing. How much they depend on their hearing. It is taken for granted. And that makes it so hard to explain hearing people the negative impact of a hearing impairment. No more a simple phone call to contact any person or to conduct business or even to call 112.

Call by mobile and internet phone:

In the last few years, the mobile telecommunication and Internet telephony are becoming more and more dominant in the European society. Hard of Hearing people want to participate fully in the new telecom developments.

New Internet telecom services like video and real time text are possible besides audio only. The concept of Total Conversation, where the user can use real time text, audio and video simultaneously will enable everybody to communicate. The EFHOH is pushing for real-time text (RFC4103 aka text over IP) to be included in the new telecom services.

About 2 years ago, the TCAM established 2 working groups where the industry and the disability organizations and NGOs were working on accessibility of the tele communication, especially on video and real time text and the accessibility of the mainstream products (the telephone terminals itself).

The idea that the meetings leads to a roadmap where full accessible communication is possible and mainstreamed.

Sadly, the industry proved unable to commit to such roadmap. Despite that there are sufficient technical solutions demonstrated for real time text (RFC4103, text over IP where text is send and received in a character by character manner).

Also, regarding the accessibility features on mainstream products, it was observed that interfaces for separate keyboards and other add-ons to help handicapped users to use the devices differ per device and/or manufacturer.

The conclusion is that it is very unsure the trust market forces on accessibility on the telecom services and terminals. The solution is possibly mandating this accessibility on European level.
